

FRESH face Festoon

A FRESH SPACE FOR A FAMILIAR FACE

In 2004, owners and creative architects Bruce and Kathy Terkeltaub opened what would become Lancaster's favorite urban boutique: Festoon. After ten years of stylish success, they're expanding once again—and this time to a 3,500 square-foot store space on Duke Street.

As a former firehouse, Festoon's new home is a testament to the cultural character of the city. With towering ceilings and expansive windows scaling the entrance, when you enter the new Festoon you're likely to be left breathless. "It's about an experience, an emotion, excitement," Kathy shares of her vision. Her design intends to be both beautiful and purposeful, as she hand selects each detail of the store with thoughtful regard for the client.

And for Kathy, it's all about knowing the client—a skill that she has perfected throughout more than 30 years in the fashion and design industry. From working as a fashion illustrator for the original Hager Department Store to being a floral designer at her own avant-garde flower shop, each step along her path to Duke Street has given her a unique understanding of the industry.

Festoon has already established itself as one of the foremost boutiques in the Lancaster. Now with even larger goals in reach, Festoon continues to grow. With an expanded selection of home goods, personal care, clothing, and cards, Festoon is making a name for itself beyond the boundaries of the city. "Lancaster is ready for this kind of anchor store. It will give people a reason to come here from anywhere."
